

by Cristina Cordova on November 21st, 2010

While the AOC e2237Fwh doesn't have the best name, it's certainly a pretty alternative to most of the monitors on the market today. The front of the monitor has a clear plastic border and on the whole, the monitor is remarkably thin. It's held up by a circular foot stand that had me worried about stability at first. It's a pretty small stand for a 22" monitor, but it held up and never toppled over.

As for the picture, the monitor did have the slight blue-green tint common with many monitors these days, but it wasn't too noticeable. I used the eco settings so that the brightness of the screen adjusted to my office and home settings in the morning at night. I used the monitor with both DVI and VGA cables and they worked equally well. The monitor has a great resolution at 1920x1080 Full HD, which was the same resolution I had on my current 24" monitor.

The super slim profile with the design twists of the clear plastic border and circular foot stand got a lot of compliments and the price is not too shabby either at \$199.99 on Amazon.

<http://www.cutegeek.com/2010/11/21/the-aoc-e2237fwh-a-monitor-with-style/>